6 Stress-Busting Secrets From Real Appeal Coaches

By Caroline Roberts | May 21, 2021 | Rally Health

Stress can feel like kryptonite for your weight loss goals, making it harder to stick to your healthy eating habits and activity goals. Real Appeal coaches share what's helped them keep stress levels in check over the past year.

Sneak in Some Giggles

When you feel like you're in a pressure cooker, laughter is a quick way to feel some release, says Coach David Blasucci. Go ahead and watch some funny cat videos, or listen to your favorite comedian's podcast.

Get Outside

"Nature has been a great stress reliever for me," says Coach Hilary Simmons. "Feeling the sunlight and air on my skin lifts me up instantaneously." Sun on your face through an open window may help your mood.

Feed Your Curiosity

More time at home can be a stressor, so Coach Rachel Kerce has been intentional about trying new activities — such as baking and sewing projects. "Creativity brings me joy, while keeping my stress down," she says.

Set Screen-Free Times

"Disconnecting from the daily news and social media has allowed my nervous system a break," says Coach Shelley Craig. Try setting "screen-free" hours to give yourself a rest from the constant inundations of notifications.

Forge connections

Research shows that connecting with loved ones can help keep stress levels in check. Blasucci says his ability to stay level-headed is directly tied to his strong support network. Try a virtual game night or a lengthy phone call.

Sweat It Out

Exercise is a stress-buster for many. "I stop and do jumping jacks or run up and down the stairs, right then and there, instantly feel the endorphins and I feel much better afterward," says Real Appeal Coach Mary Arguelles.
