How to Store Fruits and Veggies So They Last Longer

On average, around $1,500 worth of food is wasted per year in each household. The good news is that a few simple tricks could have a massive impact on the environment (and your grocery expenses) to reduce the amount of produce we toss every day.

Citrus
Buy these fruits without netting and store at room temperature. Store in the fridge so they last longer. If your citrus starts to turn, you can slice the fruit up and freeze it as ice cubes for drinks.

Salad
Wash and dry loose leafy salad greens in a salad spinner, then wrap loosely in paper towels and store in a food storage container to keep the leaves crisp.

Onions and Potatoes
Store in a cool, dark place like a basket in a cupboard or cellar. Avoid storing in plastic bags. Once cut, onions should be stored in a resealable bag in the fridge.

Cucumbers
Wash cucumbers after you bring them home. Thoroughly dry them, then wrap each in a cloth or towel. Store in the fridge in a reusable vegetable bag.

Apples and Bananas
Buy bananas when they’re still slightly green and store them away from other fruits. Keep apples in an uncovered fruit bowl on the counter and make sure to store them out of direct sunlight.

Herbs
A great hack for storing fresh herbs is to chop the leaves in a food processor and place into an ice cube tray with a little olive oil and store in the freezer.
